Falconer TNM Round Three Report

A round of ups and downs in the top section, as both Sean Kelly and Guy Argo tripped up in likely winning positions, losing to Nathan Fong and Nicholas Weng respectively. Expert Edward Lewis continued his winning ways by crushing NM Yusheng Xia in a model game. Tied at the top with a perfect 3-0 scores are Fong and Lewis, who most likely will be paired against each other in round four. IM Elliott Winslow, NM Michael Walder and Experts Weng and Eugenio Garcia are all at 2.5 points, so the tournament is wide open.

The race in the under 1800 section tightened up with only three tied at a perfect 3-0: Nursultan Uzakbaev, Karl Kingma, and Christian Brickhouse. Uzakbaev continues to impress with another sharply played victory over George Tsolios, while the under-rated Brickhouse was gifted a point when his opponent Venugopol Mani resigned after only eight moves – in an equal position!

Neil Falconer (1923-2014) was a Mechanics’ Institute trustee. A remembrance penned by former Chess Room Director IM John Donaldson can be found here: http://www.uschess.org/index.php/April/Neil-Falconer-1923-2014.html

Establishing a Rating at US Chess and FIDE

Are you a new player with no rating? You are so called an "unrated" player, both at USCF and at FIDE.

US Chess: Once a player plays a game, they get a rating right away. Even after the first game, regardless of who they play against (player with a rating or unrated player) and regardless of the score of that game (win-draw-lose), a rating will be established. During the first 25 games of a player's history, the rating will be denoted by PXX, where P means Provisional and the XX is the number of total games played.

So, for example 700 (P20), means that the player played 20 rated games already, and the rating is 700. The (PXX) will only disappear once the player crosses the 25 games threshold. After that the rating is listed by itself, without any indication how many total rated games the player played.

FIDE: Players have a much harder time to get a rating with FIDE. Below are the relevant rules.

7.1.4 A rating for a player new to the list (aka FIDE rating list) shall be published when it is based on five games against rated opponents. This needs not be met in one tournament. Results from other tournaments played within consecutive rating periods of not more than 26 months are pooled to obtain the initial rating. The rating must be at least 1000.

8.2.1. If an unrated player scores zero in their first event this score is disregarded.

This means that for those players who are looking to establish their FIDE rating, they MUST score 0.5 points against a player with FIDE rating and play a total of five games against players with FIDE rating.

This is why oftentimes it takes a while in the under section for players to get a FIDE rating. However, once you get a rating, there is no P (provisional) denotation at FIDE.

Calculating any rating change is a complicated procedure both at USCF and FIDE. Those who are interested in the process, please see the following links for further explanation, and, as always, feel free to email me with any particular question.

Richard Hack’s Stories from the Chess Café

One of the things I like most about the Chess Café is the range of experience and thoughtfulness I find among the participants. Whatever question I may have, I can get answers there. I can also bring one or two of my games for entertainment and analysis, and I often find out that some of my losses aren’t as terrible as I thought they were.

The game’s the thing. Once that clock starts, you have a limited amount of time to make all your good and bad moves, to keep fighting and trying to get control of that moving arrangement of pieces on a board that is a symbolic world in conflict. Win or lose, there is much to celebrate and much to correct, and there’s always another game.

We often think of chess players as mental athletes. When I asked about philosophers in chess, names like Emanuel Lasker and more recent thinkers were brought up. Mike Walder said when he was a member of the chess club at what was then known as the University of Illinois, Chicago Circle, the other members were either IT or philosophy majors.

In one of the games we looked at on March 14 (Einstein’s birthday), Paul remarked, “It’s much more difficult to defend than to use good, aggressive play.”
This brought to mind some comments by Judit Polgar: “Chess is thirty to forty percent psychology. You don’t have this when you play a computer. I can’t confuse it”.

And:

“One can say that in the last decades chess has become more of a sport than a science. I see it from an artistic point of view.”

Philosophy and the search for truth on the chessboard also have to deal with superstition, which is rife in sports. Last week Alexey Root was wearing a Norway Chess sweater that got a lot of compliments. “I like it, but I’ve finished 1½-2½ twice while wearing it, and was 4-0 not wearing it,” she said with a smile. Her new title, U.S. Women Chess Champions, 1937-2000 is forthcoming from McFarland Books, and she has begun a column on Women in Chess for the American Chess Magazine. Sal Matera, Zooming in from the Hudson Valley in N.Y., praised ACM for what it has accomplished. He is a great and generous source of chess knowledge.

Boris Gelfand writes about his 2004 game with Daniel Hugo Campora in his book Positional Decision Making in Chess, where with a definite structural advantage, he decided to trade the queens and rooks and win the endgame of bishop and knight against two knights: “This is a moment to go with your feeling, . . . and I always play according to my beliefs. At the end of the day it is not a matter of life and death; nor is it the right moment to try to find ultimate solutions.”

Interview with WGM Jennifer Shahade
by Dr. Judit Szteray

What motivated you to write the book, what went through your mind when you first thought of the idea of writing this book and approached the publisher?
For the first book, Chess Queens, I aim to show the REAL women of chess who are making moves on and off the board from the first Women’s World Champion Vera Menchik to modern day players all over the World who use chess to challenge their minds and find flow---and as a vehicle for fun and liberation.

There are so many new chessplayers, of all ages and genders, who are hungry to learn more about the culture and history of chess. I see Chess Queens as a great entry point to introduce them to dozens of amazing women of all backgrounds-- and to give them tools to confront pseudo-science that claims women and girls aren't as talented at chess as males.

What would be your message to the Northern California - San Francisco Bay Area girls who are competing in open tournaments? Some of whom are too shy/afraid to come out to play in our open tournaments? (Percentage is still under 10% sadly.)
I'd say don't be deterred by the haters. For every person who is against you, there are more who are rooting for you to succeed. Every girl who plays competitive chess is part of making the game more inclusive and fun-- and showing the world that it's NOT just a boy's game. It can be tough at the start, but if you stick with it, you may find that you get double the joy: both from thriving and from proving those who doubted you wrong.

What are some of the effective or unique ideas you have that could start to increase the percentage of girls/women in chess, that brick and mortar chess clubs can start employing to see if they are making a difference?
I think the pandemic showed that girls really crave social groups (like all genders do.) Because girls/women are outnumbered, it can be harder to find someone who is in the same geographical area and you click with. That's why we are keeping our online community going for the US Chess Girls Club. I am also very excited about the return of Spring Scholastics, where we will have "Girls Club" at every event. That's something for other organizers to emulate: if you have a mixed event, you can have a special meal, or area for girls/women to socialize or meet. You could also give prizes, like books or boards or gift certificates for the top scoring female player.

It's also important to be inclusive and welcoming to the LGBTQ+ community and gender minorities. I know the Mechanics is a leader in that area, as one of the players featured in Chess Queens, Lisa Willis, told me!

There should be a zero-tolerance policy for harassment and bullying. Make it clear that you're an inclusive and positive space and set up a clear way to report abuse.

Thanks for all you do to help making the game fun and open to all and for giving me a platform to discuss Chess Queens!
